

This good twelve-acre field was, a few months ago, broken up into tiny, uneconomic fields by the large permanent ditches of the old style irrigation methods. Now the permanent ditches have gone, replaced by these channels which are dug and filled in as required by tractor-drawn implements

The Ferghana Valley is being transformed. Collective farm chairman and field expert gaze proudly across the farm fields, to which irrigation is bringing new life

First-class new equipment is added to the improved and greatly extended irrigation system. These new cotton-picking machines belong to the Tspisar Machine and Tractor Station
